

Considering a Move to Singapore?

With FinTech growing at a higher rate in APAC than any other region globally, Singapore is one of the top countries responsible for hiring international candidates. With this in mind, here are a few hints and tips to consider before embarking on this life-changing opportunity.

Singapore at a glance

A small island nation — only slightly larger than the Isle of Man — with a combination of modern skyscrapers and traditional South-East Asian architecture. English is the official business language and western influence is visible throughout. With 1.65 million non-residents out of a total population of 5.1 million, there is a thriving expat community.

Cost of Living

Named the world's most expensive city four years running by The Economist — but it is relative. Property, cars and imported goods carry high import taxes, but public transport is affordable and income tax is low compared to Europe. Singapore starts looking very viable for earning and saving well.

Climate

Tropical rainforest climate. Highs around 32°C and lows of 24°C. Two monsoon seasons (December–March and June–September), but temperatures stay warm throughout — an improvement on most of northern Europe.

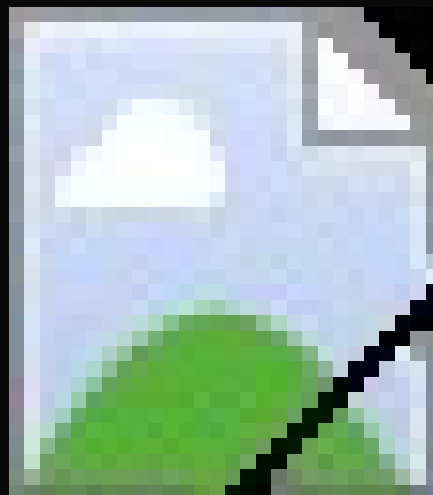

Visas

Multiple work visa categories, referred to locally as 'passes', are available. These typically require an existing job offer. Full details can be found on the Ministry of Manpower website.

Education

Ranked 2nd in the world (after Finland). For candidates relocating with families, Singapore is also 7th globally for the availability of childcare and expat-friendly schooling.

Travel Opportunities

Thailand, Vietnam, Bali, Cambodia, Philippines and Malaysia all lie within a 3-hour flight. Since budget airlines expanded across the region, the list of affordable travel options available from Singapore makes most of Europe look very limited.
